The etymology of Edinburgh traces the origin of the name of Edinburgh, the capital of Scotland. The city is known as Edinburgh in English and Scots, and Dùn Èideann in Scottish Gaelic, both of which are derived from the older place name Eidyn. It is generally accepted that this name derives ultimately from the Celtic Common Brittonic language.

THE origin of the name Edinburgh has fascinated me for as long as I can recall. His descendants, however, would conquer the ancient Gododdin stronghold. According to the Annals of Ulster, the Angles of Bernicia captured Din Eidyn in 638 and subsequently renamed it 'Edin-burh', adapting the name used by the Gododdin.

Why is Edinburgh called Edinburgh? - The Scotsman

However, David Waddell reminded me of why Edinburgh was known as Auld Reekie in the 18th century. David wrote: "It was because there was no sewage system and people used to empty their chamber pots into the streets (Edina s Roses*) at 10 o'clock in the evening."
